September 6, 2017

Dear Friends

The Vice Chancellors of the University of Cape Town, the University of the Free State and the University of the Western Cape, and the Chief Executive Officer of the Human Sciences Research Council, wish to extend a very warm welcome to all of the guests participating in the 2017 conference. It is our great pleasure to have each of you in Cape Town for the 15th Annual Human Development and Capability Association Conference, which explores the theme of “Challenging Inequalities: Human Development and Social Change”.

We are deeply honoured to be hosting the HDCA Conference on African soil for the first time and wish to thank Prof Murray Leibbrandt, the Chair of the Local Organising Committee, and the other members of the Committee, for their hard work in organizing the Conference.

The Western Cape is home to four of the strongest universities in South Africa. Together with the Human Sciences Research Council and the University of the Free State, which hosts a Department of Science and Technology-National Research Foundation Research Chair in Higher Education and Human Development, we all have a long history of engaged scholarship, with many of our researchers deeply committed to using their scholarship to address the challenges of human development. Across the three universities we also have many specialized programmes dealing with key aspects of human development and human well-being. We invite you to visit the institutional websites for more information.

Over the next days, we will engage with new scholarship, new people and new perspectives. It is our sincere hope that the conference will challenge all of us to think more deeply and creatively about the contributions we can make to building a more sustainable and equitable social order in our own countries and globally.

We wish to thank you for being here for this important work.

We hope you enjoy your time in Cape Town, and wish you all the very best for a useful and stimulating conference.

Sincerely,

Dr Max Price

Prof Francis Petersen

Prof Tyrone Pretorius

Prof Crain Soudien

About the Human Development & Capability Association

The Human Development and Capability Association is a global community of academics and practitioners that seeks to build an intellectual community around the ideas of human development and the capability approach, and relate these ideas to the policy arena. The Association promotes research within many disciplines, ranging from economics to philosophy, development studies, health, education, law, government, sociology, and more. While primarily an academic body, the Association brings together those primarily involved in academic work with practitioners who are involved in, or interested in, the application of research from the fields of human development and capability to the problems they face. Our members live in over 70 countries worldwide.

The United Nations Development Programme's 20th Anniversary Human Development Report (2010) defines human development as "the expansion of people's freedoms to live long, healthy and creative lives; to advance other goals they have reason to value; and to engage actively in shaping development equitably and sustainably on a shared planet. People are both the beneficiaries and the drivers of human development, as individuals and in groups." This influential conception of human development drew from the work of Amartya Sen and others on the Capability Approach, which "concentrates on the capabilities of people to do things—and the freedom to live lives—that they have reason to value" (Sen, Development as Freedom, 1999, p.85). Sen emphasized both the importance of having the capability to live in valuable ways and the value of agency—of shaping one's own life and influencing one's broader surroundings. The focus on capabilities has suggested new ways of evaluating socio-economic progress. Some have offered concrete accounts of the central human capabilities—Martha Nussbaum's is the most influential. She argues that "Our world is not a decent and minimally just world unless we have secured the ten [central] capabilities, up to an appropriate threshold level, to all the world's people" (Nussbaum, Frontiers of Justice, 2006, p.70).

The HDCA's main activities include holding an annual international conference such as the present one, facilitating a range of thematic groups, and publishing the quarterly Journal of Human Development and Capabilities, a peer-reviewed academic journal published by Taylor & Francis.

Launched in 2004, the HDCA has over the years been led by a number of presidents, who have come from different scholarly disciplines:

- Amartya K. Sen (2004-2006) | economics
- Martha C. Nussbaum (2006-2008) | philosophy
- Frances Stewart (2008-2010) | development studies
- Kaushik Basu (2010-2012) | economics
- Tony Atkinson (2012-2014) | economics
- Henry S. Richardson (2014-2016) | philosophy
- Ravi Kanbur (2016-2018) | economics

2017 Kuklys Prize for the Best Conference Paper by a Graduate Student

The Kuklys prize is annually awarded at the HDCA conference for the best conference paper from a graduate student. It is aimed at promoting the work of graduate students in the field of human development and the capability approach. It is named in memory of Wiebke Kuklys, who, as an Economics PhD student at Cambridge University, advanced the capability approach by exploring the application of new statistical techniques. Wiebke studied in Germany, Chile, and England, and combined an open mind for new ideas with a concern for the most vulnerable people. She believed that high-quality research could contribute to making the world a better place to live in. Wiebke died in June 2005, at the age of 33, only a few months after receiving her PhD degree. Her dissertation was published posthumously by Springer under the title Amartya Sen's Capability Approach: Theoretical Insights and Empirical Applications. The prize is awarded at the Closing Ceremonies.

Conference Aims and Theme

“Challenging Inequalities: Human Development and Social Change”

Economic inequality is bad for political equality and political freedoms which are key conditions for the expansion and securing of human capabilities and the building of decent and inclusive societies. The conference theme explores this as a dynamic challenge of human development and social change, together with the potential of the capability approach to offer a powerful normative framework to advance justice in unequal societies. The capability approach is now a widely-used framework for evaluating equality and justice in terms of human well-being, freedom, and development. It has been developed partly because traditional approaches focusing only on income or utility do not adequately capture the diverse, plural, and multidimensional nature of human lives and development experiences, nor provide the informational basis of justice in policy making and implementation. As a concept originally developed by Amartya Sen and Martha Nussbaum, capability works to understand and explain inequalities and injustices in the social, political, economic and historical arrangements that shape human experiences, and the valuable functionings that people have reason to choose for flourishing lives.

The capabilities emphasis on plural human freedoms allows us both to examine the experiences of real lives but also to develop methodologies to aggregate and index multiple aspects of human development and capabilities across significant in/equality dimensions (for example, youth, cities, education and social cohesion), viewed and researched from multiple disciplinary perspectives. One of the main goals of the HDCA 2017 Conference will be to assemble and compare a variety of research approaches – theoretical, conceptual, philosophical, methodological, empirical – in global South and global North contexts in order to shed light on the benefits of, and challenges human development and capability expansion confronts.

By selecting ‘challenging inequalities’ and also ‘social change’ as an overall theme for the HDCA 2017 Conference, we want to explore the normative and empirical power and scope of the capability approach to describe, assess, and promote change in the direction of human development and social justice in an increasingly globalized world where people’s circumstances and values are vastly different and in which inequality is rising within and across countries.

The capability approach itself is evolving and open to extensions, modifications, criticisms, and revisions. We would like to invite scholars, policy-makers, practitioners, and students who are working at the frontiers of this expanding field of research. Anyone new to the HDCA is of course more than welcome, as we appreciate diversity of participants in terms of research topics and methods, professions, and regions.

This conference is being held at a key and historic moment for the continent and for South Africa – economically, socially and politically – offering the possibility to bring the approach to the attention of wider audiences of researchers, young scholars, practitioners, and policy-makers and brokers. It will be an exciting opportunity for all of us to meet for the first time on the African continent.
